A RICH SCANDAL.

mplicating Prominent Parties in this City.

A Church Choir Rehearsal Broken up by a Jealous Husband.

Who Assails in Church the Alleged Destroyer of His Family Happiness.

And Drops His Man With a Brickbat.

For severel days past Omaha's musical society has been in a flutter of excitement over the exciting denouement to a family quarrel, which, by reason of its publicity and probably serious consequences, all concerned have pears that for some time rast the husband of one of Omaha's prominent lady vocalists has entert-ined serious suspicions of her fidelity, and has been dogging her footsteps with the intent to discover something upon which to base an open rupture of relations. It is not asserted that he has succeeded in so doing, but he has openly told his suspicions to many of his friends and bewailing the sad condition of his family, has vowed vengeance upon the party who was interfering-with his demestic felicity.

The lady seems to have been entire. ly unconscious that she was giving any cause of offence to her jealous husband, and has gene to and from choir meetings, musical society concerts and evening church with other escorts. One of these, a traveling man, whose name we shall not give, has been quite attentive, and on last Saturday evening accomparied the talented singer to a prominent church on Eighteen h street, where the quartette were about to practice the musical programme for the following Sunday's services. While disinterested parties claim that there was nothing in the actions of either which could have given ground for the slightest whisper of surpicion, her jealous spouse thought otherwise. Sherily after his wife and her a endant had left the house on their way to church, he determined to follow and bring aff dire to a focus. He armed himself with a brick bat and stealthily entered the building in order to awa't developments. Just at a most a meeting Monday evening and decided inopportune moment, when all the that if certain rines who have been choir were present, he raised himself admitted to the league do not put in and struck the traveling man a terri an appearance by the next meeting blow with the brick bat, knocking him

> A terrible hubbub ensued, the ladies shricking and the men rushing to the assistance of the fallen visitor. During the racket the husband made his escape, and, meeting some friends, old them what he had done, adding that if this didn't put a stop to such "funny business" he'd find some other way which would. The choir rehearsal, it is said, scarcely progressed as smoothly as usual, the refrain, "O. ye rocks and stones, praise ye the Lord," seeming decidedly inappropriate to the occasion, and one of the ladies being rather hysterical, the solo singing was not as well rendered as it might have been under other circumstances. As is usual in cases of this kind, opinion is divided. The friends of the lady assert that the jealousy of Another large invoice of ladies' and her husband is entirely unfounded children's hats-something new and and that his brutality compelled her to seek other escorts to and from the church where she is engaged as a singtablishment, corner of Douglas and er. They insist that he has been on a perpetual spree for some time rast, and that he really was not capable of forming an opinion on any subject, much less on one in which his cruel icalously has biased his better judg-

As to the gentleman, who was the unfortunate victim of Mr. wrath, they say that he was only acting the part of a polite and courteous escort, and that not a scintilla of evidence could be brought to implicate him in anything in the least ques-

The husband, on the other hand, is very free in asserting his opinions on the subject, and declares that this is by no means the first offense, a neighboring city having already heard rumors of like occurrences not many months since. He declares that he has borne with his wife's idiosyncracies in this respect until forbearance has ceased to become a virtue, and he was compelled in his own defense to a sert his marital rights. In short, he does not hesitate to make the most dam aging instructions in the premises, and says he can back them by proof. Friends of both parties have been trying to hush up the affair and bring about a reconciliation, but so far the ttempt has been vain. It now seem probable that a divorce suit will be the next development of the day, when the whole story will in all likelihood

be produced in open court. ATKINSON'S, acknowledged leaders

The Fire Ordinance the Editor of Tus Bas. I wish to call your attention to the numerous violations of the fire ordinance in our city by the building of wooden sheds and additions to houses and barns within the limits in which such building is prohibited by the city ordinance. The worst of the matter is that it seems impossible to have the police headquarters seems to do no good. I defy you, Mr. Editor, point to a single instance in which the fine which the law says shall be imposed, has been imposed on the guilty parties. What good does it do to make complaints if the comp'aints are unheeded. The matter is one which affects the property and perhaps the lives of our citizens, yet it receives less attention at the hands of the proper authorities than a common and trivial offense against the city's peace and order. glarized a few nights ago. Upon being searched at the jail a napkin and the cover of a silver butter dish were found in his pockets, both of which were stolen from the "Gold Lawn and Lace Tics Dust" saloon.

The prisoner evidently came from Philadelphia as letters were found in his pockets from his father in that city, begging him to mend his ways and turn over a new leaf, and telling him he would send him a remittance of $100 soon, with which to proceed to his uncle in Cheyenne. Saintor confessed that he had a partner in his crooked business, and this afternoon Jack Wells, alias Jack Fisher was arrested wearing one of the stolen coats.

Both will be arraigned this afternoon before Judge Hawes. ATKINSON'S for the finest work.

says: No other actor, from the beginning of the seasons to their end, is accorded a more hearty welcome by the people of Pittsburg than Lawrence Barrett. It is safe to assert that in all the comretitive rivalry which has existed be ween Barrett and Booth, that he has never suffered the lesst, but on the contrery has secured legions of warm admirers and now holds a place in the esteem of lovers of histronic excellence from which he is not likely to be ejected by any living actor. The most striking feature of Mr. Barrett's skill is his elocutionary art, which, augmented and made powerful by a voice of wondrous strength and harmony, renders the accomplishment of the most delicate and difficult requirements in this re-spect a seemingly trivial task. * * Richelieu," the play in which Mr. Barrett has no equal—that clouded leaf of a remarkable history—and mighty struggles and t-ttering weakness of the grand old man, nearing at once the end of earthly power and earthly existence is portrayed by Mr. Barrett with a dramatic power and force such as is capable of being displayed by him alone. We know it is said he is equaled in the character by Mr. Booth, out it is at least a disputed question, and between two such actors, where the meed is so evenly contested, we must accord the palm to Mr. Barrett.

Richelieu is, for many reasons, pe-culiarly within his province, and the characterization is all but perfect.
